'A Time To Every Purpose' by Ian Andrew

What if Jesus hadn't been crucified? That simple 'what-if' is the spur to the stunning clash of science fiction and alternative history which is A Time To Every Purpose. The novel rocks along, from the opening scenes of unfurling Swastikas over London to the shattering climax of a world torn asunder. Detailed, grounded in frighteningly believable shades of what might have been, what is and what could still be, this debut novel from a new talent is not to be missed.

For two thousand years the religions of earth unite in peace and harmony, but in the early decades of the twentieth century a fledgling Nazi Party sweeps to power. Unstoppable, their brutal persecution of millions is a never-ending holocaust. Yet a few heroes remain.

Leigh Wilson, inventor of one of the most significant discoveries in human history and a leading member of the Reich's Technical Division has kept a secret all her life. But plunged into the aftermath of the cold-blooded murder of a Nazi official, she is forced to make a choice. Will she use her power to reset history? Will she destroy what she loves to save what she can only imagine?

A Time to Every Purpose poses the eternal question all humans face: Is this my time to act?
